After seeing Cusco, we moved to Huyro, the site where we would be working. My heart beat at the beautiful surroundings. I was excited about the work I would be doing. All the staff and other volunteers who had arrived in Huyro earlier welcomed us with warm hearts. The next morning we began working at the site. To arrive at the site, we had to walk up a mountain for thirty minutes. I imagined that we were in an Indiana Jones movie, making a path through the forest to find evidence of the ancient Inca civilization.

- ① calm and relieved                ② nervous and frightened
- ③ envious and anxious            ④ irritated and upset
- ⑤ anticipated and fascinated

Near the end of our visit, having completed our volunteer work, we went by train to the nearby ruins of Machu Picchu. The ancient sky city welcomed us with its grand view of the Urubamba Valley far below. We could not imagine how the Inca could have built such a large city on top of a high mountain. We were amazed by the outstanding building skills of the Inca civilization, which prospered more than five centuries ago.

After my unforgettable days in Peru, I returned to my daily life at home. The happy moments I spent there went by so fast. I wished I could have stayed longer. Participation in the Inca Project was a blessing to me, allowing me to learn the importance of volunteering. I received far more than I gave from the experience.

- ① What the Inca Project Is about
- ② Amazing Stories of the Inca Civilization
- ③ How to Participate in a Volunteer Work
- ④ The Importance of Preserving Ancient Remains
- ⑤ What I Learned from a Volunteering Experience
